

Coverage in the Financial Times, 21st April 2012

Data from the P2P money website was today published in the Financial Times. This is an important step in gaining recognition as an independent source of information on peer-to-peer lending.

The P2P money website publishes data on the financial returns from the major P2P companies, before and after fees, bad debt (predicted and historical) and taxation, for both individuals and businesses. We are the only website to currently publish this information.

The article in the Financial Times was concerning the difference between the headline and actual rates, due to bad debts, fees and taxation. The P2P money website believes it is important to understand these differences, but we are still passionate that peer-lending can make a positive difference to borrowers and lenders.

<http://www.p2pmoney.co.uk/press>

Ian Gurney, founder of the P2P money website, has lent money on Zopa, Funding Circle, RateSetter and YES-secure. Please also refer to the disclaimer.

